

What The Bible Says About The Triune Godhead

AN IMPORTANT NOTE OF INTRODUCTION:

I wish to start off this study by making a rather significant observation about God, the God of all eternity who existed before time began. If the “Godhead” was singular (only one Divine person), then God would be incomplete in a most serious and profound way. God would not know – experientially – what a relationship was or is. In addition to being infinitely holy, God is a relational Being. He understands and appreciates relationships. In fact, God has elected certain people from among all men and women, to have a relationship with, for all eternity. When the Lord Jesus walked the earth 2000 years ago, he selected a group of 12 men to fellowship with for the duration of his 3 year earthly ministry. These were men whom Jesus spent every day with, all day at times, for 3 years straight. That in and of itself is a testimony to the desire that God has for a relationship with His people. The Bible’s primary focus is about a holy and merciful God who is reconciling estranged people back into a relationship with Himself – at an enormous cost to Himself personally. To minimize the relational aspect of God, or worse – to say it is not a necessary component of God’s Personality – is to detract from who God is, and that is a serious act of rebellion for the creature to deny what the Creator has said about Himself in sacred Scripture.
